IELTS Double Questions Model Essays 1

The IELTS double question model essays include the “many small local shops are closing” question.

Large supermarkets have set a yardstick for many small local shops in an area. Using brand-new technology and infrastructure, they provide a hassle-free shopping experience to the customers. However, it affects the local shops' profit and tends to question their survival in the market. This essay will discuss two main reasons for this situation and address them with important takeaways.

Local business owners invest less in infrastructure and in products compared to big supermarkets. They could accommodate a limited number of products and provide a decent shopping experience. On the other hand, supermarkets or hypermarkets invest more in infrastructure development and ensure that the product can be identified and bought by the customers in less than a minute. They are organised, well-packed and offering discounts. For instance, Walmart is one of the largest supermarkets providing almost all products at one place and saving customers' time tremendously. Moreover, they sell products online at cheaper rates.

Apart from that, supermarkets provide refund options for poor quality and other benefits to their customers. It plays a major role in shifting from local shop centres to big supermarkets. Since supermarkets buy stocks directly from the manufacturer, they minus the extra costs and offer discounts. For example: a 150 ml bottle of Fogg body spray for men is 150 rupees in a local shop, then the same product is 140 rupees in a supermarket. To address this situation, local shop owners must work together with big supermarkets for fair competition. Each can sell certain products so that customers would visit both the shops and satisfy their needs.

To conclude, local shop owners and big supermarkets must come to good terms and ensure fairness. Even though technology became a deciding factor, there are other factors to consider. In my opinion, both the shop owners should have a balanced approach in providing service to the customers and ensure they gain enough profit to pay their bills on time.

IELTS Double Questions Model Essays 2

The IELTS double question model essays include the “many museums and historical sites are mainly visited by tourists” question.

Undoubtedly historical sites and museums are sought-after tourist attractions for any traveller. But the sad truth is that international tourists visit these sites more than the local people. There are steps to be taken by the government to boost local tourism. In this essay, we will unveil the reasons behind this situation and how to tackle them in the following paragraphs.

Several factors come into play when it comes to tourism, such as transportation, safety, cleanliness, affordability and so on. Foreigners attracted to a historical monument want a memorable experience, including insights about its history, art & culture etc. Whereas local tourists visiting a historical monument want to have free access, entertainment, and good food. Moreover, local tourists have already visited museums and other historical sites and completed their bucket list.

The solution to attract local tourists is the need of the hour. Since the government dedicated a ministry exclusively to the Tourism industry, they must come up with unique ideas like publicising its value, its contribution towards our culture and national heritage, etc. They must offer free tickets, rides for kids, fun activities, and more to keep them entertained throughout the day. On top of that, they must create awareness on social media, TV & print media, etc. For instance, the Gujarat government announced free tickets for people under 18.

In conclusion, local people are fond of excitement and spending quality time with their family. To ensure that, the government must actively participate in promoting tourism amongst them without compromising their international visitors every year.

IELTS Double Questions Model Essays 3

The IELTS double question model essays include the “shopping is the favourite pastime ielts” question.

In the recent past, shopping has emerged as one of the leisure activities for young people due to various reasons. They relax, have fun, and most importantly, change their mood from bad to good. However, this experience doesn't last long. So they must indulge in other productive activities like visiting a historical place, learning a new language, art, etc.

After shopping, one feels stress-free these days as it makes them relax their minds and focus on new varieties. Firstly, millennials often do shopping for fashionable items like clothes, accessories, personal care, etc. Since movie stars and celebrities wear several types of clothes, it eventually influences youngsters to visit malls and buy them. Secondly, when they start earning at an early age, they assume that they must look good to be good. Thus, they go shopping and spend a lot on the latest products even though it's expensive.

In my opinion, young people lack the difference between necessity and luxury. Since they think shopping is a necessity, they tend to shop more like never before. But the reality is that it's nothing but a luxury. To change their mindset, new avenues must be open like sports, music, art, travel, etc. Apparently, young people give equal importance to fitness and bodybuilding, which is acceptable. But, more opportunities are available to spend their valuable time and effort.

In conclusion, shopping has become a pleasant experience for young people as they have enough money and resources to spend. However, they should know that a shopping experience doesn't last long, so they should focus on their personality or skill-building activities.

IELTS Double Questions Model Essays 4

The IELTS double question model essays include the “there are social medical and technical problems” question.

Presently, there are various issues witnessed due to the usage of mobile phones in the social, medical and technical fields. Nevertheless, some benefits outweigh the drawbacks of using mobile phones. In this essay, we will discuss both the pros and cons of mobile phones in detail. Let's begin with certain problems of mobile phones in a person's life. After the advent of the so-called mobile phones, people started to communicate less with each other rather than sharing their views, experiences, etc., with their family and neighbours. They are fond of searching for new friends and new opportunities. For instance: teenage kids indulge in chatting overnight, games and other irrelevant things. It causes a lack of social empathy, lack of interest in physical activities and so on.

Besides these issues, smartphones also have their benefits. During the Covid-19 pandemic, smartphones are the only saviours of life, especially for online education. Likewise, many individuals organised instant rescue teams during natural disasters and other calamities. Many messaging apps gave opportunities to speak without recharging. For people who stay long-distance from their family, mobile phones are the only companion that gives them hope. On the technical side, smartphones feature various apps to know about today's weather, news, recent updates, etc. Thus, unlike other electronic products, mobile phones have become part and parcel of our routine.

In conclusion, after referring to both advantages and disadvantages, it is clear that smartphones deliver more benefits than drawbacks. Keeping these factors in mind, young people must not get addicted to smartphones, especially during stressful times as it intensifies their mood.

IELTS Double Questions Model Essays 5

The IELTS double question model essays include the “with increasing population and ever growing” question.

Natural beauty spots are the most serene places in a country that protects various flora and fauna. It is the home of fresh air, water and wildlife, where thousands of plants and animals live peacefully without human interference. However, these beauty spots are damaged by humans and their ever-expanding urbanisation. In this essay, we will discuss the steps to prevent the effects of urban areas and how to do it effectively.

In order to preserve nature and wildlife, the government must prevent plastics and other non-biodegradable products that take thousands of years to decompose. If they pay attention to preserving the environment, it will obviously attract various opportunities like jobs, tourism, skill-training, and many more. Right from school, students must understand the importance of plants and animals and how nature protects us from natural disasters like tsunamis, earthquake, etc. However, the alarming threat to humans is climate change. For example: due to global warming, the icebergs in the Arctic and Antarctica are melting rapidly. It caused sea level rise and migration of fishes from one ocean to another.

To address these environment-related problems, the United Nations and other world leaders put immense efforts into fighting climate change at the earliest stages. By using green energy like wind and solar, the coal and nuclear-induced electricity generation can be minimised significantly. Similarly, introducing electric vehicles (EVs) like electric motorcycles, electric cars, and other electric automobiles could reduce global warming to below 2 degrees Celsius. Then, whoever violates the laws against environmental protection must be severely punished. These steps guarantee a sustainable future for the next generations.

To conclude, natural beauty spots are essential not only for plants and animals but also for people and the economy. In order to preserve these places, governments together with the people should act.
