Problem and solution sample answer 1

Making money while studying is a great source for students, however, there are many negative impacts that students will face in terms of their mental health and a lack of performance. In this essay, I will give the causes it creates and the solutions to overcome this problem.

The reasons students work while studying is to earn money to resolve their student loan burden and to gain work experience. To manage the cost of studies many students are preferring to get a loan from the banks. There are many banks that offer education loans for students to pursue their studies. As a result, students end-up getting employment while studying. For instance, students who wish to study in the USA get an education loan from the bank to manage their finance and start their work after admission. In addition, many organizations are looking for candidates who have prior experience in a particular field which makes the students enter into the corporate world while doing their education.

However, there are some things that students who are studying with employment can consider: Factors such as scholarships, and flexible hours. There are many scholarship opportunities, grants, and financial aid available for students to pursue their education. Extensive research is needed to find out the eligible scholarships before applying for admissions. For example, the government is offering many scholarships for different types of programs. Further, there are many organizations offering flexible working hours to manage both their studies and finance.

In conclusion, it might seem difficult to handle both academics and employment for students, however, it can be handled by utilizing the available resources to cover the entire expenses or just tuition fees to avoid debt along with working.

still, the telecast of disaster and violence shows exists which are ignorable. In this essay, I will discuss the consequences that it creates among people.

Nowadays, to attract the audience's attention, TV channels broadcast movies and news. The majority of the news they cover involves murder cases, kidnapping, and others related to violence. The motive of the TV channels is to get the highest television rating point than other channels. Thus, most of the channels are putting violence and disastrous news. In fact, people are more attracted to those TV shows. Moreover, people find more interest in these kinds of TV shows which adds more spice to binge-watching. For instance, there are some channels that display fake news with vulgarity, and negative behaviour of people which are not in the norms of the discipline. Therefore, these instances negatively impact people's mindsets.

The primary impact that is associated with the human mindset will grab the negative aspects more easily than the positive things. Actually, most people are more likely to attract to crime shows, robbery, suicidal news, etc. These TV shows make people imitate the behaviour in real life. Children are more prone to copy the characteristics and misbehave by following violent rules. As a result, they are involved in crime and other practices which lead to juvenile delinquency. For instance, as per the survey conducted in India, adults and children are highly influenced by TV shows.

To conclude, TV shows provide both positive and negative impacts to the viewers. It's totally up to the individual's perception to consume it only for entertainment purposes and not do any violent practices.

Due to the shortage of skilled professionals, poor countries struggle to make economic progress and develop the standard of living of low-income people. Due to the migration of professionals such as doctors and teachers, the native country people struggle to fulfill their medicinal and educational needs. For instance, a survey conducted by WHO reveals that underdeveloped countries have high mortality rates due to the lack of doctors. In addition to this, the migration of professionals impacts the poorer countries to depend on foreign countries for equipment and other infrastructure needs which costs them billions of dollars and leads to economic instability. To illustrate, the Venezuelan economy declined due to the huge spending on foreign technical aid.

However, there are ways that underdeveloped countries can do to solve these problems like offering reasonable pay for skilled workers and better living. One main reason that skilled doctors or teachers leave their native countries is to make the betterment of their life on the salary package and employee benefits that are offered by the developed countries. So, to reduce this, the government needs to consider the concern of the employees and offer valuable pay with incentives and benefits to make them stay in the country itself. Also, for the betterment of the people living, the government can allocate a budget to improve the living standards by lending from the banks. For example, countries like Bangladesh bought a long-term loan from the World Bank to develop their medical facilities and educational level.

In conclusion, skilled professionals such as doctors, teachers, and others are leaving their native (poorer) countries because of the lack of opportunities. The impact of this migration makes the countries even more economically unstable and to reduce this government needs to take action to give better employment opportunities, salary pay, incentives, and other perks for proficient employees.

than the arts. In this essay, I will discuss the reason for the change in preference and the ways to convert them to get an interest in the arts.

The first and foremost reason for this change in trend is because of the lack of job opportunities for the people choosing arts as their career. In brief, throughout the generations, artistry is considered a hobby instead of a professional job which has many employment opportunities to make an income out of it. For example, fine art cultures such as painting, dancing, and music are treated as a hobby that individuals perform by learning for fun after office hours or on weekends to relax and relieve their stress. Thus, this makes artistic skills have less demand in the job market.

The only solution to increase people's interest in the arts is by increasing the awareness of the arts among youth by the government. Creating stage shows about the various types of art forms and attracting people will be a great way to persuade people. Also, the government can pay the artists higher pay and job opportunities which in turn elevates the job market and attracts more people. For instance, there is an exhibition held in Paris to elevate the artist, which makes one of my friends participate in it and as a result, he got an award. This recognition made him start an online coaching class and thus he gained income for survival.

In conclusion, despite making art as a cultural symbol, many people prefer choosing their career in the streams of science, technology, and other not arts. The major reason for this scenario is because of the lack of expected job opportunities in the market. Hence, to resolve this, the government needs to take action and provide awareness among the people and boost their interest in the arts.

Problem and solution sample answer 5

Online shopping behavior has widely increased in recent days all over the country after the pandemic. Due to this, every product is available easier at the consumer's doorstep. This causes the companies to increase their production more than expected and creates huge damage to the environment. In this essay, I'm going to elaborate on the cause and provide a solution for it.

To begin with, nowadays people do impulsive purchases of products, they buy most of the products to handle their boredom factor rather than buying for essential needs. Due to this increase in product purchases, many new companies have come into the market. This establishment will lead to improvising their production by all means which in turn leads to deforestation, global warming, air pollution, and water pollution. Also, there are still many industries using plastic as a packaging material, which will also result in damaging natural resources.

The primary solution to solve this problem is by educating the individual about the impact of their frequent consumption of products on the environment. This can be done by the government by advertising the concept of minimalism which is widely followed by the majority of people. Also, nowadays people are much interested in organic products, recycling packaging, and other eco-friendly products and initiatives by the brands. Government should also consider this and support these businesses and also suggest companies participate in societal improvements by planting trees and others.

In conclusion, the damage caused to natural resources is because of people's luxury behavior and also companies' huge production. This can be reduced only if companies shift to green products and the government lends a hand towards it. And, also people are aware of the causes they produce to the environment and reduce their behavior.
