Writing Task 2 Sample 14

Tourism and Travel IELTS Essay 1

A lot of places in the world rely on tourism as a main source of income. Unfortunately, tourism can also be a source of problems if it is not managed correctly. Describe the advantages and disadvantages of tourism in the modern world.

Give reasons for your answer and include any relevant examples from your own knowledge or experience.

You should write at least 250 words.

Model Sample Answer 1 Band 8

It is true that travel is a major source of income for many countries around the world. Visiting a new location has a number of negative effects on the neighbourhood if it is handled improperly, but I would contend that there are more advantages for a variety of reasons that I will go into in the subsequent paragraphs.

On the one hand, the tourism industry has some detrimental effects on the environment. First, the habitat of wild animals may be destroyed by the construction of new infrastructure and utilities. For instance, to accommodate tourists, businesspeople have built more hotels close to beaches and forests; nonetheless, a variety of wildlife may now be threatened or face serious survival risks. Moreover, since they lack a sense of obligation to preserve these environments, tourists generate pollution, waste, and even trash.

However, I think that going to a foreign destination is advantageous for both tourists and governments. Travelling broadens people's perspectives and thoughts. For instance, while travelling, tourists encounter various cultures and pick up new languages. Additionally, it opens up job prospects in the provision of services like lodging, entertainment, and transportation. Most importantly, since the tourism industry is crucial to various economies, it raises living standards in the area. Another illustration of this is how the tourism industry encourages investment from multinational corporations.

In conclusion, I believe the benefits of tourism, such as expanding horizons, increasing employment, and adding to the national economy, exceed the reasons for disadvantages even though it has certain negative effects on the local environment.

Today, and as a result of an increase in travel, tourism contributes significantly to the economies of many nations. The prosperity of the tourism business has both benefits and drawbacks, which will be covered in the paragraphs that follow. In my opinion, there are many advantages that obviously outweigh the disadvantages.

To start, one clear advantage is that travel promotes economic expansion. In other words, tourists frequently shell out a lot of cash for lodging, transportation, meals, and other services. For instance, shopkeepers along Istanbul's coastline, a popular tourist destination, are instructed to offer unique products, which has boosted the local economy. Additionally, I firmly believe that luring tourists accounts for a sizable portion of the prosperity of growing nations. To grow, oil-rich countries like Iran should invest in other businesses like this one.

Planners should not overstate the benefits of travelling, as every industry has problems. In this regard, many nations have seen a sharp rise in the statistics of social vices, which is a worrying and significant issue. For instance, many travellers encounter criminals in East Asia and lose their belongings, including their camera, phone, money, and even their meals. The number of tourists will decline overall due to dangerous destinations if this issue is not addressed in a timely manner.

As discussed, the tourism business has many pros and cons. While the pros exceed the cons, rising traveller numbers do increase crime in some areas. However, it should not be overlooked that the tourism industry helps a nation develop in a number of ways. Today, tourism accounts for a large amount of many nations' income, thus they must take serious measures to control its pros and cons.

In any nation, the tourism sector is one of the main industries that generates revenue. This will encourage and explore the diverse cultures that various locations have to offer. If not handled properly, it can have adverse effects on both tourists and residents. In this case, I think there are more benefits to tourism than drawbacks.

Foreigners will learn about and explore the stunning attractions, culture, cuisine, natural beauty, and residents of the country they will visit, which is a clear benefit of the development of tourism. Visitors today enjoy their vacations by spending time with their friends and family and travelling to new locations. Increased tourism has a significant positive effect on both the local population and the economy. The government offers its citizens greater employment opportunities, including tour guides. Tourists also treasured their recollections of their travels and the experiences they had there.

There are some small issues that nations are having managing the excessive buildup of tourists. Some tourists disobey the laws of the countries they visit. Anywhere you go, especially if it's your first time, you should respect and abide by the regulations and policies. Traveling to Middle Eastern countries, where the Muslim culture and religion are more prevalent, is a prime illustration of this. There, things like wearing provocative clothing, such shorts and sleeveless tops, and consuming alcoholic beverages are severely forbidden.

In conclusion, anyone can enjoy visiting other countries and experiencing their culture, but travellers should exercise caution and abide by the laws already in effect. Both the visitor and the locals profit from this.

Every nation wants to showcase its past through various venues, including tourist visas. Few countries totally rely on this because tourism is their main source of income. By drawing more visitors, a well-run tourism destination can assist the economy. But if not managed properly, this industry could cause some issues for tourist areas. The pros and cons of the tourism sector in the modern period will be covered in this essay.

First off, encouraging tourism boosts the nation's economy and inspires a lot more people to discover its natural beauties. As people begin spending money on worthwhile items in the country, it will immediately contribute to the nation's revenue, which can aid in the reduction of poverty. For instance, Australia, a tourist destination, uses the money it receives from visa sales to meet the needs of its own citizens. Only well-managed nations encourage exploration because they feel safe. New Zealand's fair approach to foreigners has raised tourist visa applications by 40%.

Second, if the country doesn't satisfy the explorers, it will have numerous financial difficulties and develop a bad name abroad. The number of people trading within the state falls, and countries that depend on this will struggle financially. To demonstrate, Iran failed to care for tourists, which lowered the number of visitors and made it the worst country to visit.

To summarize, tourism has grown as people travel to new destinations. There are several benefits to encouraging tourism, including increased economic growth and an increase in foreign visitors and vice versa. However, if not managed properly, the country may lose revenue and visitors may lose interest in such areas.

Tourism and Travel IELTS Essay 2

The development of tourism contributed to English becoming the most prominent language in the world. Some people think this will lead to English becoming the only language to be spoken globally. What are the advantages and disadvantages to having one language in the world?

Give reasons for your answer and include any relevant examples from your knowledge or experience.

You should write at least 250 words.

Model Sample Answer 1 Band 8

The rise of tourism throughout the world has contributed to the language of English gaining more prominence as a result of the revolution it has caused. Some people have the opinion that this will result in English being the only language that can be used in legal matters. The primary benefits and drawbacks of having a single universal language are going to be discussed throughout this essay.

Ease of communication and better international relations are two major benefits of using a common language rather than the languages of individual countries. There would be much less difficulty in gaining access to the resources of other countries and communicating with their citizens if a universal language were in use. For instance, if a Canadian resident were able to communicate freely with a Japanese person, it would boost tourism revenue for Japan. In addition, Japanese people are known for their dedication and hard work, which means they may have useful suggestions for the Canadian economy. A second benefit is better communication between nations. For instance, having a common language would make it less difficult to fill the talent gap by exchanging foreign workers.

On the other hand, losing localism is the biggest drawback. It's possible to make English a country's primary language, but it's hard for everyone to speak it like a native because country accents vary. For instance, Canadians, Australians, and Americans speak English but their accents differ. Making English the primary language also destroys the local language and culture that the ancestors have preserved.

In conclusion, while a single universal language is undoubtedly beneficial to each country and improves relations among them, it is unquestionably detrimental to the local language and harms local culture in the long run.

Due to the fact that the tourism industry has been making its way around the world over the course of the past few years, the popularity of the English language has increased significantly. As a result, there are those who believe that the language that is spoken the most frequently, English, will eventually come to dominate all of the other languages. Having only one language spoken throughout the world does, however, have a few drawbacks.

On the one hand, having a universal language would remove barriers to communication and promote mutual understanding between nations and there would be widespread economic growth and increased international trade as a result. For instance, when all parties are fluent in each other's language, there are no language barriers, and everyone is on the same page; this simplifies interactions and eliminates misunderstandings between nations. Moreover, if everyone just used the same language, it would be super easy to interact with people from all over the world.

The widespread adoption of a common language would undoubtedly simplify international interactions, but it would come at the expense of local languages and cultures as well as the tourism industry. In other words, if there were only one language spoken everywhere, linguistic diversity and progress would eventually come to a halt. Without these types of celebrations, the tourism industry will also suffer greatly. Therefore, a global monolingual English language may pose a grave danger to localized traditions all over the world.

In conclusion, the argument for making English a universal language will have long-term negative effects on native tongues and cultures all over the globe. Many advantages would result from standardizing on English, but the drawbacks would be overpowering.

As international travel has increased in popularity, English has replaced other languages as the routine for everyday interaction. Some people think that this pattern will ultimately lead to English's dominance as the global language but this has some disadvantages too.

With a universal language, people can more easily communicate with one another. As a result, tourism, trade, and business will all improve. As the economy improves, more people will desire to visit other countries. Travelers will raise the standard of living for locals in many parts of the world. When people from different countries speak the same language, misunderstandings are eliminated, which is a huge boon to foreign ties. To sum up, it will enhance the world as a place where people are able to communicate with one another.

In terms of disadvantages, because of the emphasis on only one language, regional languages may die. If every child in school is taught only English, there will be nobody left to pass on regional languages to coming generations. This is illustrated by the disappearance of native American languages on the North and South American continents as a result of the English language's influence. Furthermore, many great works and epics have been written in ancient languages such as Sanskrit and Greek. Even if we translated these works into English, the complexity and elegance of the language would be lost. Also, for many people, language is not just a way of communicating but also a source of identity and access to their cultures.

In conclusion, while a common language would undoubtedly bring people closer together, the potential harm it could cause to the world's everyday speech and classical languages must be taken into account.

Some people assume that English, which is the most commonly spoken language in the world right now, will one day take over all other languages and make them all go away. Having one language would help people understand each other and the economy grow, but it would also have some disadvantages.

One language would improve international communication. Thus, if everyone spoke one language, countries and people worldwide would understand each other, promoting learning, information, and ideas. One language also boosts economic growth. Trade would flourish between countries if everyone spoke the same language, improving the global economy.

On the other hand, there seem to be clear problems with having only one language for the whole world. First of all, it would mean all of the other languages and cultures would end up dying out in the long run. One of the best things about this world is how many different kinds of people live here. Each culture is different, with a distinct way of life and way of seeing the world. If there was only one language, all of these things would be lost. Second, tourism would end due to the lack of reason to travel for fun and interest if everyone used the same language and had the same culture. This would be terrible for the economies of many countries that depend on tourism

To sum up, having one language for the whole world would be good in some ways, but a lot could be lost too. The priority should be given to keeping regional languages and cultures alive so that future generations can enjoy a rich world heritage.

Tourism and Travel IELTS Essay 3

It is not necessary to travel to other places to learn about other cultures of other people. We can learn just as much from books, films, and the internet. Do you agree or disagree?

Give reasons for your answer and include any relevant examples from your knowledge or experience.

You should write at least 250 words.

Model Sample Answer 1 Band 8

Some people say you don't have to travel to foreign countries to understand their cultures. Books, documentaries, and the internet are all great places to learn new things. While I agree that we can learn the basics about a culture from books, the Internet, and movies, I disagree that we need to travel there to fully understand its people and customs. My perception is justified in the ensuing paragraphs.

Firstly, we live in a multicultural world where many people are curious about and eager to learn about other cultures. And I think it's important to constantly challenge ourselves by taking on new knowledge. These days, it's a breeze to educate oneself about foreign cultures with the help of online articles, documentaries, and books. Some people believe that by reading these, they have learned everything there is to know about other cultures. They believe it is a waste of money to go somewhere just to learn about the culture, so they refuse to go there.

However, many people enjoy travelling to different locations for the purpose of cultural education. Exploring the area on your own is the only way to get a true sense of it and pick up useful skills. The local cuisine, agricultural practices, and festivals can all be experienced firsthand by paying a visit. In addition, travelling to the region where a particular skill was first practised is the best way to pick up the nuances of that skill from the experts.

In the nutshell, there are many cultures to learn from, and each can be learned about through various mediums like books, online resources, and films; however, seeing the wonderful world through naked eyes is far more valuable.

Experts are of the viewpoint that the lives of many different cultures can be grasped without travelling to other parts of the world. Books, movies, and the vast online resources available today make it possible to learn and gather information from many different perspectives. To give a more thorough explanation of my position, I will do so in the following paragraph.

The first and foremost reason for my inclination is that learning about a new culture no longer necessitates going to far-flung places, as technology has made that unnecessary. People interested in other cultures can learn more about them through a variety of resources, such as the Internet, movies, and books. For instance, a recent survey conducted in Australia revealed that the majority of its citizens know very little about a wide variety of different cultures. The availability of informational resources like books and the web makes it simple for them to participate and learn more about the rituals.

In addition to this, it may be too easy for people who have mobility issues to attend events. Under those conditions, they can easily become immersed in the customs of other countries and feel the emotions of people in those places by watching films and videos. Some filmmakers design environments specifically for people who lack motor control. Thus, films that have an impact on one culture tend to have a wide reverberation throughout many others.

To recapitulate, the obstacle to studying foreign cultures is the scarcity of available time. Those interested in a more nuanced understanding of human history must make adjustments to their way of life in order to access reliable sources such as books, films, and the internet.

Learning about the history, values, and practices of other communities enriches our own. I also think that media like films, books, and the internet are great ways to gain exposure to new cultures. I disagree that going to far-flung locations isn't essential for enjoying them to the fullest. My preference and the other side are discussed in the below paragraphs.

To begin with, recent years have seen a rise in the acceptance of "armchair" vacationing. Books, television, and the internet make it simple to study ancient and modern civilizations in great detail. This is the most cost-effective strategy because learning about the customs and history of a foreign country has zero marginal cost. In addition, you won't get worn out from travelling, so you can take it easy and enjoy yourself.

However, travel is a must in order to learn about other cultures. Learning a new language or culture is often more exciting when it involves direct interaction with locals and actual physical presence in the target country. It doesn't matter if someone is an expert on the cuisine, weather, or history of a given region. Seeing the place in person helps shape a more realistic image in their minds. They can enjoy the delicious food, relax in the lovely climate, and observe the historical development of the area. Not only that, but there are a plethora of other cultural considerations. For instance, non-native Punjabis living abroad are very familiar with traditional Punjabi culture. They frequently take their kids to Punjab. With the goal of educating them about and keeping them connected to their heritage in the area, its people, and its history.

To put in a nutshell, indeed, books, TV, and the internet all have their uses. To truly grasp a new culture, however, I believe travel is essential.

Model Sample Answer 4 Band 6.5

Everyone should make time to go travelling because it is so crucial. Travelling to far-flung locations and immersing oneself in the local culture is one way to gain cultural awareness, but there are also many resources available through reading, watching films, and researching online. In this essay, I'll discuss both perspectives before drawing a conclusion.

To begin, getting away from one's regular routine and experiencing new places can provide much-needed inspiration and energy. When travelling to other countries, it's easy to connect with the locals. Conversation with native speakers is the fastest way to acquire a new language. Moreover, travelling is a thrilling experience full of learning opportunities and new experiences. Scuba diving, skydiving, and river rafting are just a few examples of extreme activities that everyone should try at least once.

However, there are those who think they don't need to venture far from home in order to expand their horizons through reading and watching television. To begin, reading books not only improves our language skills but also our knowledge, which leads to greater imaginative capacity. Second, the web is widely acknowledged as a wealth of data. We are not limited in our search capabilities, and all relevant results will be displayed immediately. For instance, technological progress recently has allowed for the development of virtual reality. This tool has lowered the barriers to global travel and introduced people to the culture and customs of people all over the world.

To sum up, travelling to new places is one way to broaden one's horizons and expand one's mind, but staying at home with books and the internet is another viable option. The essay has shown that each is important in its own way and has partially agreed with both perspectives.

It is not at all out of vogue or out of the mainstream to go on a vacation, or even numerous holidays, throughout the same calendar year. There has been a notable increase in business activity in this industry.

It is no secret that more and more individuals are benefiting from reduced travel restrictions, whether for business, immigration, or pleasure. In the last decade, it would have been difficult to prepare a trip from start to end, including booking flights, hotels, and activities, as well as generating a precise budget, without leaving the comfort of one's own home. These days, with the help of cell phones and travel websites, it's not only possible but also a breeze to do so. As more nations acknowledge tourism's importance as a key source of revenue for the government, investment, and growth in this industry also increase, resulting in reduced overall prices and costs involved with voyages, making travel more viable and, consequently, more frequent.

International tourism has brought enormous benefit to many places. At the same time, there is concern about its impact on local inhabitants and the environment. Do the disadvantages of international tourism outweigh the advantages?

Give reasons for your answer and include any relevant examples from your knowledge or experience.

You should write at least 250 words.

Model Sample Answer 1 Band 8

Experts all across the world have argued about whether the upsides of travelling the world are worth the potential drawbacks. As it's a major source of income for many countries, I believe the downsides could not exceed the benefits. This essay will address the advantages and disadvantages, along with supporting evidence for each position.

One positive aspect is that foreign tourism contributes to national economies. Recent UN reforms, for instance, reveal that the tourism industry provided 10-15% of PIB for 32 European, African, and American nations in the last five years. People's social lives and economies grew as a result. In addition, many of the world's superpowers are investing in the development of natural tourist attractions.

On the other hand, the tourism industry contributes to an increase in pedestrian traffic. Because it is so simple to connect individuals from different parts of the world. A large number of tourists are deceiving the natives of the area that they are visiting, by promising them jobs and improved quality of life. For instance, a recent analysis conducted by UNICEF revealed that one in ten commuters all over the world are involved in the trafficking of children. Because of this, the residents of the community regarded travellers as being dishonest. In addition to this, it is the primary reason why criminal records are kept by law enforcement agencies worldwide.

In conclusion, despite the drawbacks, international tourism is one of the reasons to improve the economy of the nation. As a result, I continue to hold the belief that the advantages exceed the disadvantages. In the interest of their own economies, I would suggest that global authorities increase the number of tourism amenities available.

It is undeniable that international tourism has grown into a massive industry. However, there are many who are concerned about the potential adverse effects on the neighboring communities. The following essay will discuss the advantages and disadvantages of international tourism. Yet, in my opinion, the advantages outweigh the disadvantages.

On the one hand, there are many positive aspects of foreign tourism. First and foremost, it aids in raising the total tax revenue collected by the government. Also, it is crucial in the development of local economic conditions by providing local residents with new job opportunities. As an example, Dubai, which has no other significant industries, may rely on its oil business as its primary source of income. Due to Dubai's reputation as a global tourist hotspot, an extraordinary amount of people travel there annually. The second is the large number of locals engaged by a wide range of companies to cater to foreign tourists. So, the tourism business is good for the host communities and governments as well as the tourists who visit them.

Despite these benefits, international travel also has its drawbacks. Those who live there feel the effects. The environment also suffers because of the changes to the natural environment in an effort to make it more appealing to tourists. Moreover, it destroys local animal habitats. As so many people rely on tourism for their income, when there aren't any tourists around, locals will have tough times.

In conclusion, international tourism has both positive and negative consequences, but the benefits, including an increase in revenue and prospects for employment, outweigh the drawbacks.

In the first place, a city's economy benefits greatly from the promotion of foreign tourism because of the large number of jobs it creates. In addition, it helps a country's government by bringing in plenty of cash through forex programmes, which the government may use towards urban improvement. Aside from this, local government and residents work together to preserve a region's natural environment so that tourists from all over the world can come and admire at it. In some nations, for instance, tourism is the only industry, hence the government has instituted policies aimed at protecting the environment to encourage its growth.

Yet, as more and more tourists come to a region, locals become exposed to and often strive to adopt aspects of those visitors' cultures. In addition, several hotels, highways, and retail establishments need to be built, resulting in destroying of many trees. For instance, the advent of tourism in several developing countries resulted in the government's need to build hotels and resorts in the region.

In sum, there are some negative effects of foreign tourism, such as deforestation and cultural loss; however, the positive effects far outweigh the negative ones, as the economy improves and the government takes environmental protection seriously.

The local people and environment are damaged by international tourism. The benefits of tourism, on the other hand, are incredible. For me, the benefits are still much more essential.

First of all, tourists help the economy and culture of the area. As more and more people from all over the world visit the country, it will become more well-known, which will boost the tourism economy in a big way. The hotel rooms and restaurants would be full, which would give even more people jobs. A lot of people also go to shops that sell gifts and mementos. The cross-culture makes it easier for people from different countries to connect with each other, which leads to more business and; more knowledge for the people who live there. Businesses can get help from foreign companies, and they can also find partners in other countries.

A visitor could bring some negative things to a country. People often don't respect a local tradition because their culture is different from it. For example, they might be rude or make fun of festivals where people wear costumes that foreigners might find fitting. The recent complex COVID scenario shows that travellers are also a big cause. This could make it hard for people to stay together or, worse, lockdown.

In conclusion, even though they make mistakes, international travellers are good for a country and its people. It is suggested that they make those cons easy to ignore so that they can get the most out of international aid.

In this contemporary era, globetrotting has become a core sector for nations to boost their economies. Nonetheless, the advancement of this industry is a threat to native cultures and the environment. A reliance only on natural resources for infrastructure and invasion of foreign cultures are the causes of exploitation. I partially agree with this statement and I laid out reasons in the following paragraphs

To begin with, tourism relies much on natural resources because they are exploiting the forest areas to construct infrastructural facilities such as hotels, buildings, and many more for accommodation. Additionally, forests were getting destroyed and wildlife was getting extinct just to make tourists attractive places. People are not realizing that even though these beautiful places of the nation are attracting tourists, ultimately we are depleting the resources as well as the balance of the ecosystem.

In contrast, native culture is the first and foremost reason which attracts sightseers the most. Many cities are just financially reliant on the tourist industry only. Having said this, it is impossible to accept the fact that a regional culture will be extinct based on the increased tourist operations. For instance, Jammu and Kashmir in India are the place wherein tourism is the only source of earnings. Moreover, it had never caused any harm to the communities who live there for generations.

To conclude, there are some drawbacks to the tourism industry. But in comparison, it also benefits local nature and the economy surpasses the damage. In my opinion, the government should take action or pass laws to handle the cons of this industry.

Tourism is a multi dollar industry and it is true that its share of economic development is huge. However many people believe that the evolution of jaunting is causing damage to the environment as well as local traditions. I partially agree with the latter statement.

To start with, this industrial sector plays a major role to provide tremendous support to the economic welfare of the nation. Additionally, traveler mostly travels to explore places and they have no bad intentions to hurt the local cultures as well as the environment. While I can say that before visiting any country or nation, they must research about that place and try to respect those. Furthermore, it is true that more than foreigners, local natives are loitering at tourist attractions. For instance, the Taj Mahal is one of the seven wonders of India that is visited more by Indians and is responsible for its damage.

Contrarily, there are certain bad faces of this sector too. Firstly, it causes a major impact on the ecosystem because knowingly or unknowingly people litter and loiter in places that in turn become unhygienic and unhealthy. To illustrate this, let's take an example of 'the great wall of China. In one survey it was revealed that every year tonnes and tonnes of garbage were collected from that place.

In conclusion, it is true that the tourism corporation has become an integral part of the economy but the fact that the resources are depleting cannot be ignored. In my perspective, I think a balance between both the factors should be maintained.

Model Sample Answer 3 Band 7

Undeniably, tourism has become one of the most powerful economy-driving sectors. However, some people think that this Industry was causing a bad effect on native cultures and their environment. I strongly disagree with the former view.

In my perspective, this sector helps to popularize traditions, and cultural attractions and contributes to the preservation of the natural heritage. In addition, the traveler's visit to a particular place or country will surely go to bring financial assets to the local businesses of that area. Thus, tourism can be seen to improve dwellers' lifestyles and can also reduce unemployment rates therein. Also, the local communities can sell their products at their decided rates. To specify, the more tourists visit that area, the more entertainment services are opened to meet their needs, which will help them to gain profit for the local people. According to one survey, almost half of Jammu and Kashmir's money is accumulated by the tourism industry. Therefore, because of its financial benefits, many states in North and South India are promoting tourist attractions to bring visitors as much as possible.

Despite these advantages, there are a few disadvantages too. Firstly, the number of people polluting the environment was increasing. For instance, in Goa, the beaches are littered with bottles, soda cans, packets, and much more garbage. Moreover, carbon emissions produced by vehicles have negative impacts on the atmosphere.

To conclude, the benefits have outweighed the drawbacks. I strongly suggest that government should work on the problems in order to reduce the negative effects of the tourist industry.

Due to globalization and convenience in transportation, there is a rapid surge in exploring the world. Several people are claiming that the increment in tourism industry is bringing some bad influences on local communities whilst others believe that it is advantageous too. This essay will discuss both views in detail.

To start with, it is true that tourism is financially beneficial for local regions. Also because of this trend, employment opportunities are increasing for locals. When visitors pay a visit to a place of interest, they have to buy tickets or fees for the entrance. They can earn money by selling their goods and services to foreigners. Moreover, histories were unknown to the world before this rapid exploration, but nowadays cultures of some local communities were exposed to the Earth. For instance, after the evolution of this sector, Indian mythology was revealed among Asian people. Also, many tribes love their teachings to be wholly spread on this earth.

In Contrast, there are a few pessimistic views also. But the most prominent is the concern of feelings and hygiene of locals. Some foreign people used to wear western clothes at sacred places which receives drastic effects against the trends as religious places have some restrictions which everyone should obey.

In conclusion, despite the adverse impacts of the tourism sector, it is a worthwhile industry that should be promoted all over the globe as it plays a vital role in economic development. Also, the issue of unemployment can be solved by this trend.

FTourism and Travel IELTS Essay 7

Nowadays international tourism is the biggest industry in the world. Unfortunately, international tourism creates tension rather than understanding between people from different cultures. To what extent do you agree or disagree with this opinion?

Give reasons for your answer and include any relevant examples from your own knowledge or experience.

You should write at least 250 words.

Model Sample Answer 1 Band 8

The increase in globalization has resulted in an increase in the number of tourists who travel to nations outside. Some people believe that the tensions between the two countries are getting worse because of this massive enterprise. I am against such a viewpoint; in the following paragraphs, I will explain my preference in further detail.

To begin, I would like to bring to your attention the fact that such trips have helped to strengthen international relations. This statement is misleading to a significant degree because it is a common knowledge that tourists who travel to other countries take the best that represent the finest aspects of those countries. This perception deepens the understanding, compassion, and love that exists between two cultures. Consequently, this causes development, and it also restructures the relationship. The enhanced relationship of India with other nations should be taken as the best example of this situation.

On the other hand, the fact that some visitors are subjected to racist insults while traveling to other countries is not something that ought to be ignored. It is frequently seen that some racial groups are consistently targeted no matter which country they visit. It should come as no surprise that the perception that they carry with them will not have an effect on the country's diplomatic standing.

To sum up, it is clear that such travels have more positive effects than adverse effects when compared to one another. It is imperative that we need to address the issues that are being experienced by the tourists and propose a workable solution.

It should be noted that due to the advancements that have occurred in the world, the number of people traveling to another country has significantly increased. This has, on occasion, made the situation more difficult and impacted diplomatic relations. I bolster this opinion and would like to propose my arguments in the ensuing paragraphs.

First and foremost, it should be taken into account that there are numerous instances in which tourists have been put in dangerous circumstances as a direct result of their travels in other countries. Otto Frederick Warmbier, a citizen of the United States who resided in Ohio, is an example of such a scenario. He was accused of stealing a North Korean flag and sent to prison. He was obliged to work. He died after being in a coma for reasons the North Korean official never divulged. This increased hostility toward North Korea's regime structure.

On the flip side, it should be noted that one of the most compelling arguments in favor of fostering international tourism is the positive impact it will have on the bonds that exist between nations as well as between individuals. At the moment, international tourism is regarded as one of the largest and most powerful businesses in the whole world. Because of this, the majority of countries around the world would need to maintain positive relations with their immediate neighbors in order to safeguard this source of income. For instance, Sri Lanka is one such country that is majorly based on tourism. A huge part of income comes from this industry, which makes this very important for the livelihood of the people living there.

To conclude, it can be said that necessary actions must be taken to control any detrimental effects.

One of the largest industries contributing to a nation's economic prosperity is international tourism. It does produce some disagreements between locals and tourists. But these are not complex issues, so I disagree with the claim that it generates more tension than understanding.

To commence with, the experience of visiting a new country results in an interchange of cultures between the two countries' visitors. People tend to adopt a disposition that is more tolerant and open-minded toward all elements of life. People frequently find that traveling to wealthy countries causes a transformation in their worldview as a result of the experiences they have there. They are able to witness the advancements that those who maintain an open mind are capable of accomplishing. On the other hand, tourists arriving from wealthy countries would take up some important information from their hosts during their time in poorer ones. The influence of Western culture on other regions of the world is perhaps the clearest example of this phenomenon.

On the contrary, we have been witnesses to a number of cases in which overseas tourists have been taken advantage of. There are a lot of businesses that tack on an additional fee for certain services. Due to the fact that these individuals are ignorant regarding the products that they are selling, local sellers demand a higher price.

To summarize, I strongly disagree that international travel promotes conflict rather than mutual understanding between people of different cultural backgrounds. Tourism is the most effective method for being familiar with a distinct culture and bridging the gap that exists between cultures.

Model Sample Answer 4 Band 6.5

There are a lot of people who believe that traveling opens up one's mind. Having said that, this assertion is not completely accurate. It is my opinion that only a few weeks spent in another country is not enough time to acquire a sufficient grasp of the people and customs of that nation. My opinion will be elaborated on in the ensuing paragraphs.

Being a tourist in a foreign country presents a unique set of difficulties, some of which can result in hatred from the local populace. Initially, a foreign tourist is helpless and is commonly exploited by the locals. Due to the language barrier, there is also the possibility of misunderstandings. Moreover, travelers frequently have their vacations spoilt by the continual push to make purchases.

Additionally, the hospitality and tourism sector is a very essential component of any economy. Visitors from other countries contribute to the country's economy by generating revenue, which in turn enables the economy to grow. Therefore, the government makes all of the necessary accommodations for tourists and works to mitigate situations that could lead to friction between people of different cultural backgrounds. For instance, in all of the most popular tourist destinations, specialized tour guides are made available to international visitors to ensure that they do not experience any difficulties as a result of the disparity in customs, in particular with regard to the use of language.

In conclusion, I would say that I agree with the premise that global tourism leads to misunderstandings between individuals of different cultures, and that these misunderstandings are frequently the catalyst for conflict rather than celebration due to the inherent disparities between the civilizations.

Air travel can only benefit the richest people in the world. The ordinary people can get no advantage with the development of air travel. To what extent do you agree or disagree?

Give reasons to justify your response and include any relevant examples from your knowledge.

You should write at least 250 words.

Today, it is a controversial topic that travelling by air medium is advantageous for the wealthiest people in the world and not the middle-class people, but I acknowledge that air travel is equally fruitful for both rich as well as poor.

Firstly, I agree that there are a number of reasons that the upper class is more beneficial to the growth of air travel. First, wealthy entrepreneurs are more benefited from their global business chains. Air travel is comparatively much faster than any other transit. As a result, rich businessmen can easily manage their work, like going to Malaysia for a meeting in the morning and returning to India in the evening. Second, for middle-class people, it becomes difficult to even think about air travel due to its cost, but at the same time, air travel associated with extravagance services has become a purpose of entertainment and relaxation for wealthy people.

Secondly, air transportation provides employment prospects for the general public. Ordinary people can readily find work as cleaners, tour guides, and flight attendants when hired by airlines. Also, the flights benefit a wide range of individuals, not only the rich. The impact of air travel on the local economy has been enormous. To demonstrate this, many regular citizens rely on the cash generated by visitors for their livelihoods when they come to the area. In the tourist season, some people can make enough money to last them the whole year by selling their products to tourists.

In conclusion, while first-class people get benefited from air travel, but, at the same time, I would claim that people with low income have other modes to get profited from air travel. Ultimately, I believe that both rich and poor can benefit from air travel.

Model Sample Answer 2 Band 7.5

According to some people, air travel is only worthwhile to those who have a lot of money. I completely agree with this assertion and reasons to agree with these according to my opinion are given in this essay.

Firstly, I support my viewpoint due to the high cost of airspace expeditions. If you can't afford it, it's exclusively for the rich and famous people. There must be at least one thousand dollars in expenses for each individual. For example, a full round trip for the whole family will cost $10000, which is just the cost of air travel. So, it is, therefore, safe to say that most people have never had the chance to experience it because of their pocket constraints.

Secondly, it is true that the wealthy have more access to air travel. Airlines must pay for qualified personnel, modern equipment, and marketing from the start. By adding such amenities for air travel, the price of the ticket rises, this simply means that air transportation may not be feasible for individuals with a limited budget. In addition, low-budget travellers have access to a variety of transit choices, all of which are accessible at various costs like a train or metro, cab or uber, tram, and even private vehicles.

To conclude, only the groups of the richest people can have the chance to experience it. Middle-class people who can't afford to spend such a fortune of their money just on an air voyage can only imagine the pictures of the air trip.

The air transportation mode is considered one of the greatest inventions of mankind. However some people believe that air travel can only benefit the rich and ordinary people cannot have any benefits, but I tend to believe that both the low-income and wealthy humans benefit from the aeroplane. I feel this for the following reasons, which I will discuss in the following essay.

First, affluents spend money on better flights to enjoy the luxurious services such as a business class with comfortable seats, and priority custom check. But at the same time, air travels are favourable for the rich due to some reasons. Like, as if there are sudden situations like meetings or medical issues. For circumstances like these, there is a high frequency of flights on a daily basis so, they can easily prepare for any emergency.

Second, middle-class people can also have merited from air travel. Firstly, there are a number of classes at different costs available on flights for the common people, so that they can travel according to what fits their pocket the best. Secondly, many people are employed in the tourism industry. Even if they cannot afford to travel themselves, their source of income is directly or indirectly dependent on these tourists who travel by air. For example, in Canada, during the fall season, many guides, local vendors, and cab drivers earn themselves a hefty sum of money.

To conclude, not only rich people but also ordinary people are benefited to travel around the world conveniently thanks to the advancement of air travel.

In the modern era, there has been significant growth in air travel. Some people believe that flying is only affordable to the wealthy, leaving others on a small budget behind. First of all, one benefit of flying is that those with more money can take vacations to soothe themselves in far-off locations. Travelling to exotic locations is more likely to be done by those who can afford it than by those who cannot. Secondly, no matter how far away the desired location is, travelling by plane takes the least amount of time. As a result, numerous entrepreneurs can reach a variety of clients or can for meetings, even in far-off places. For example, a wealthy Industrialist from my office used to visit Dubai and back to India on the same day twice every week for meetings through air travel. So it gets very feasible and affordable for upper-class people to travel frequently by air.

Air travel can also benefit people by providing more job opportunities and allowing them to travel to different places. With affordable airfares and low-cost flights available, people can have more choices about which flight's price fits their budget for air travel. As they can now afford to travel by flight according to their budget so, more and more middle-class people are choosing to apply for a working holiday visa to travel the world while supporting themselves by working part-time in the country they are visiting.

To summarize, while air travel is only affordable for the wealthy, people from the middle class can also travel by plane today, thanks to low-cost airlines coming to light.

As industrialization and modernization are increasing, the modes of transport are changing and evolving. In the last decade, the use of vehicles has boomed, and the use of bicycles has decreased. Today, many new modes of transport are available to go from one place to another, but still, some people think the bicycle is the best mode of transportation. I disagree with this statement that the bicycle is the best way of transportation in this phase of time.

Although bicycles are great for short distances and staying healthy, for long distances, people have no choice but to resort to modern modes of transportation such as cars, motorbikes, bicycles, buses, and trains. These vehicles work quickly and help us meet deadlines. For example, a recent World Trade Organization report found that countries with extensive road and rail networks to support modern rapid transit have higher GDP growth rates than countries that do not. It depends on the mode of transport.

Also, it is not suitable for all groups such as disabled people, elderly, and working women. In addition, it is not suitable for all requirements, such as long-distance business or overseas travel, shopping or formal meeting, etc. Also, it does not provide the privacy that a car provides. We cannot read newspapers or work on our laptops while cycling, but cars do offer these services.

To conclude, although bicycles are eco-friendly and can reduce pollution in the country, due to the hectic schedule of people in the world, people use vehicles to avoid wasteful time.

During modernization, transportation systems are necessary for everyone, not bicycles for the community to move from one place to another. However, the bike is the cheapest way, good for the body, environmentally friendly, and has many advantages, but it is used for some distances. I think it's better for everyone, but the approaching transport is the fastest way to get around. I agree with the statement which I will expand on in the following paragraphs.

There are several reasons why bicycles alone do not completely solve traffic problems. First, it is manual and therefore time-consuming. In today's competitive age, time is an important factor in everyone's life. Second, it has a lower resilience, you may not carry more than one or two people at a time. Third, it's only useful for moving around in tight areas. A person is not allowed to ride a bicycle on a highway or dual carriageway.

Bicycles, on the other hand, are neither practical nor suitable for mass transport. Also, by using cars and bikes, one can reach its destination and workplace on time and can save energy for doing work over there.

In conclusion, as the bicycle is time-consuming and manual, most people in today's time prefer to travel in their cars and private vehicles, and also in a car almost 4 to 5 people can travel which can reduce traffic problems, especially in a country like India, China, etc., and also one can only ride a bicycle in the city area, not in the highway.

Critics are concerned that children will be endangered if they are given freedom of choice, while others believe that they will be better equipped to handle the future consequences of their acts if given such freedom. In this essay, I'll compare and contrast the two perspectives in question and express my conclusion.

First, there is the risk that letting kids use their thinking will have undesirable results. Several studies have found that youngsters who are more capable of making their own decisions are more likely to disobey parental rules and expectations. In addition, they don't have the life background or perspective to make some choices. Children will inevitably make numerous blunders if they do not heed parental guidance.

In addition, kids might be able to pick up some useful lessons from this conduct. The experience could help kids learn to be accountable for their actions. If they have been trained by their parents to look out for themselves, they will be able to make good decisions and prioritise what matters most to them. Furthermore, it may help kids learn to make ethical choices as adults. Finally, children may be better prepared to respond correctly when faced with challenging situations.

In conclusion, allowing adolescents to make their own decisions may have a wide range of unintended consequences. However, this strategy could be effective if parents take the time to teach their children about right and wrong in the actual world. Students will be able to make informed decisions since they will have access to criteria and resources.

Individuals in modern societies are given more and more freedom as they mature, including the freedom to decide for themselves how they will spend their time and what they will consume as part of their daily routines. While some may think that this trait reflects a person's inherent selfishness, others may disagree. I see this as a good thing since it has the ability to make them feel more accountable.

One benefit of letting children pursue their interests in their daily life is that they become mature and responsible people. Because of what they've done, they have no choice but to strive for perfection rather than just the highest possible degree and settle for nothing less than world supremacy. The opposite may be true, young people may become more egocentric if they utilise this approach. If people could simply learn about themselves and accept that as the ideal, they would stop appreciating the differences among others.

In my opinion, the formation of such a style makes adults more successful when attempting to take action by helping them see their own bad and positive sides. If they stop to think about their actions and learn from them, they might be able to accomplish more of what they set out to do. It is the responsibility of parents to instill in their children a healthy level of tolerance and acceptance of the needs and points of view of others.

To sum up, allowing newborns some autonomy in the day-to-day decisions that affect their development and success is crucial. However, you should approach this from an entirely selfish perspective.

Few people believe that allowing children to make their judgments about everyday tasks would lead to our society being more egotistical. On the other hand, some people believe that it is vital for parents to make decisions that will have an impact on their children's minds. The article that follows both supports the viewpoint of individuals who hold the opposing view and presents reasons in support of my position.

First, some people believe that giving young adults greater independence has had a variety of unfavourable effects, including the general public's propensity to think exclusively of themselves and the erasure of the foundation of humanity, which stipulates that we must help our neighbours in need. Additionally, as time has passed, people have grown to have nothing more than respect for the poor, homeless, and orphaned. As a result, the country is in a jungle-like environment where everyone is focused on their family members.

Furthermore, supporters of the idea contend that the implementation of this plan is essential because it would result in the development of children's minds, ideas, and perspectives by relieving them of any concerns that might divert their attention from the activities of their day-to-day lives and the responsibilities they face. In addition, they would be able to exhibit an adequate amount of self-assurance when confronted with challenges in their future lives and when required to make challenging decisions. In addition, the children who take part in this program develop into responsible adults far more quickly than their peers.

In conclusion, I believe that the latter strategy, which was briefly stated above, is preferable since it is incredibly helpful for children's mental and physical health to avoid having too many limits placed on them in their personal lives. So that's why I agree with this viewpoint.

Some people think that it's necessary to allow kids to make decisions that affect them directly, while others say that letting kids make decisions about things like food, clothes, and entertainment makes it more likely that they'll grow up to be self-centred. This essay will look at the arguments for both sides of the dispute concerning the above remark before I say what I think.

Children who have a lot of freedom to choose for themselves may become self-centered since they are used to focusing on their wants and needs. When left to their own devices, youngsters are more prone to put their wants and needs before those of others. This makes it tougher for them to see things from other people's points of view and build empathy for them. Young individuals tend to be autonomous, and they often put their own demands before those of others while they're around others. So, allowing minors to make their own judgements in day-to-day life could undermine society by generating more people who don't care for themselves.

Having a population with a wide range of soft skills would be the outcome of allowing young people to pick based on what they desire. This is because children develop a stronger sense of independence, self-sufficiency, and self-confidence when they utilize their own free will and choose things they enjoy.

Having pondered both sides of the argument, I've determined that it's crucial for kids to be able to choose their everyday activities since it helps them become more autonomous. This is true even if it means that society will be full of self-centered people.
